Discussion on recruitment in the community: How can we reach out?

Katina Wulf: We discussed the possibility of working with Marketing and really trying to get the word out to the community about the fact that LCC isn't just for kids to have another choice to save money on their way to a four year degree but that it's for anyone who wants to get ahead in their lives. We discussed how so many people do not recognize that Reconnect is a tool they can utilize or that LCC is leading the charge when it comes to inclusivity and diversity on campus. I would really love to head up a program that goes to different craft fairs, festivals, etc, to set up a booth and let people know. Paul was explaining that the same was true for him and how certain instructors flat out told him not to come back but education is something that everyone deserves and LCC has the ability to help make that possibility a reality.

We also discussed that if we were looking for students or volunteers or if we had an event coming up that usually Chris's department would need a service request to put the information onto D2L, but that the notification would only stay at the top, depending on how many other instructor messages there were. That it would make sense to talk to someone in Marketing on most of these items.

Discussion on how to reach out to students for graduation presentations. Should we use video presentations? How do we get students interested? How do we reach students from different campuses including online?
